

Let it snow, let it snow, let it snow, with these activities picked just for you!

Do you want to build a snowman? You can build one in the comfort and warmth of your own living room. Take some white trash bags and stuff them with newspaper. Be sure to make small, medium, and large “snowballs” and use these terms with your child! Once the snowballs are made, stack them and then add facial features, arms, a scarf, or whatever your child would like to add to their indoor snowman!

Snowflake snack: Place some graham crackers on a plate and lay some lace doilies on top of the crackers. Let your child sprinkle powdered sugar on the crackers and then lift up the doilies. Pour some milk or make some hot chocolate and enjoy this snowflake snack!

Snowky Pokey: Put your right mitten in, put your right mitten out... you get the picture! Use the tune of the “Hokey Pokey” but use winter clothing in the place of body parts. Mittens, boots, hat, etc. will be “put in” and then “shake it all about” and do the Snowky Pokey!

Cotton Snowballs: Cotton balls are great to use to represent snowballs. You can dip cotton/snow balls in white paint and dot them on paper to create a snowman or glue cotton balls on a snowman outline to make it 3-dimensional. Place numbers in the bottom of a muffin tin or egg carton and have your child place the correct number of cotton/snow balls to match the number.

Sensory bottle: Take a bottled water (Voss works the best) and pour a little of the water out. Add about half a bottle of blue glitter glue. Finally, sprinkle in some foil or plastic snowflakes. Tape or hot glue the lid back on the water bottle and shake. Your child will love watching the snowflakes move through the blue water!
