Sharing

Sunday	Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday	Friday	Saturday
		1. Summer is over. Are there any summer toys or clothes that your child has outgrown? If so, share them with a local charity!	2. Teach your child the phrase "Sharing is caring." Explain that when someone shares, it means they care about you and your feelings.	3. ACTIVITY PAGE That's Mine!  Click the picture to view our featured book	4. Simple acts such as tossing or rolling a ball back and forth teach your child early sharing skills.	5. Weekend Wrap-Up Visit your local library to find books on sharing and caring. Sharing books is what a library is all about!
6. Learning to Share	7. Before a playdate, help your child choose some toys to put in a "share bin". These are toys your child has agreed to share with a friend, so there won't be any arguments once the friend arrives.	8. Use a kitchen timer if sharing a particular toy is hard for your child. When the timer goes off, your child's friend or sibling gets a turn! When it goes off again, your child gets their turn!	9. Role play sharing with your child, teaching them terms like "may I have a turn" or "you can play with it next." Learning these phrases will help your child negotiate sharing things with others.	10. ACTIVITY PAGE "Sharing Bag"	11. Make sure to praise your child for sharing and taking turns with others. Give your child positive feedback using specific words, "I like the way you let your friend use your crayons. You are sharing!"	12. Weekend Wrap-Up Volunteer or share your time at a local food bank or humane society with your child today!
13. Taking Turns	14. Play games with your child that involve taking turns. Taking turns teaches sharing skills because of the back-and-forth nature of waiting for your turn.	15. Do an activity with your child using limited materials, such as an art project with only 1 glue stick. To complete the activity together, you will need to take turns and share.	16. Use a chore chart with your child where they have a different chore each day or week. There will be some they like more than others, but they must wait their turn to do it!	17. ACTIVITY PAGE "Sharing Box"	18. Start a tradition for Friday night game or movie night. Each family member gets to take a turn choosing what game to play or movie to watch. Taking turns is sharing!	19. Weekend Wrap-Up Let your child help you make the weekly grocery list. They can share their favorite foods with you!
20. Sharing the Past	21. Share a family recipe with your child and make dinner or a sweet treat with them! Make sure the recipe is written down so you can pass it on when they get older!	22. Go through old photos of your family and share stories with your child about what was happening in the photo. This is a way to share family memories!	23. Take your child to share time with a grandparent or an older neighbor who might need some company!	24. ACTIVITY PAGE "Share your Talents"	25. Have a dance party with your child and share some of the music that you listened to as a child for them to dance to!	26. Weekend Wrap-Up Share your bed with your child for one fun night! Watch a movie and snuggle in together for a cozy night's sleep!
27. Sharing to be Safe	28. Share with your child a secret word that only you and they know for them to use if they are in a situation that is making them uncomfortable!	29. Share with your child a secret word that only they and anyone who is allowed to pick them up from somewhere knows, so that they can stay safe!	30. Share with your child a meeting place outside where they would go if there were ever a fire in your house! ## That's Mine!

by Sumana Seeboruth and Ashleigh Corrin

The main character in this book does not want to share. In fact, she thinks everything is “mine” until she sees other friends playing together without her. She quickly realizes that if she shares, friends will play with her! A lesson about sharing that is important for your child to learn is that sharing doesn't mean they have to give up what they are playing with at that moment, all the time. Sharing means taking turns. Using words like, “When I am done, I will let you have a turn,” or asking, “When you finish with the book, may I read it?” Practice sharing scenarios with your child by using phrases like these. Sometimes, children don't have the words to express their wants and needs. By role-playing with them, you give them the tools to communicate and be good friends who know how to share!

Sharing Bag

This is a way to teach your child the fun game of “21 Questions.” Put some item in a bag that you can’t see through. Your child can only ask you “yes or no” questions as they try to guess what’s in the bag before they reach having asked 21 questions. After you have a turn putting something in a bag to be guessed, they will have a turn to do the same. This game teaches taking turns, how to ask and answer close-ended questions, how to gather clues to make an informed guess, and so much more!

Sharing Box

You will need to purchase or use a sturdy box you already have with flaps that open on the top. On the top of the box, write or use stickers to make this message, “Need a book? Take a book! Have a book? Leave a book!” Place some books that you and your child no longer read and would love to share with others. Your child can decorate the box with markers or paint and stickers and glitter. Whatever they want to make the box look appealing! Leave it out by your mailbox where neighbors who are taking walks or are out on bike rides can take advantage of your generosity and leave books they would like to share as well. Make sure to bring the box in each day in case of bad weather!

Share Your Talents

Everyone has a talent. It might be singing or drawing or cooking or dancing, just to name a few! Take advantage of your family's talents and share them with each other and friends. If dancing and singing or even telling jokes are the things your family members do well, have a talent show! Each family member gets to perform and entertain each other! If cooking or drawing are favorite things in your home, then bring out art supplies to make place mats and cook up something special with your little chef! Everyone has a talent, but it has to be nurtured and given opportunities to practice it!
